Course Description

This course is a general survey of the discipline of International Relations main theories and concepts, as well as a brief outline of the history of world politics since World War One. It proposes an intellectual history of the academic discipline as situated in the evolution of the world political context. The course provides the tools to form one's own rigorous analyses about how world politics works and why it works the way it works. It incites students to go beyond commonsense discourses and normatively biased or ideologically oriented assessments of world politics typical of politicians' speeches, experts' comments, and media coverage.
