Course Description

This course identifies the conditions that have led consolidated and emerging democracies to issue transparency and access to information laws as a first step to building accountability, more responsible governments, and more vigilant citizens. Topics covered include: the right to access public information, regulations, and impacts it has had on the relationship between society and government, and in the performance of government entities; the implication that right to privacy and protection restricts the right to public information; the difference between transparency and accountability and analysis of the status of both dimensions in Mexican reality.
