Course Description
In this course, students examine key issues in the study of philosophy of mind and philosophy of language, identifying the interconnections between the two. Some major thinkers, both recent and from earlier periods of the Western canon of philosophy, are studied. Topics might include the mind-body problem, the nature of mind and its relation to the brain, issues connected with meaning and understanding, how (if at all) language governs, limits or facilitates thought, and the relation between language and its object.
