Course Description
Over the past decades, states, international organizations, and non-governmental organizations have relied on economic tools of diplomacy for many purposes. This course focuses on two economic instruments: economic sanctions and foreign aid. It examines the effects of a variety of domestic, international, and cultural factors on the initiation and outcomes of economic sanctions and aid. It analyzes both general studies (e.g., theoretical and empirical literature on economic statecraft) and a few cases of sanctions and aid (e.g., UN sanctions against DPRK or ODA conducted by KOICA) to get balanced perspectives. Assessment: Two exams (20%), Class presentation (20%), Research Project (50%), Class Participation (10%).
