Course Description

This course explores a wide range of core topics in social psychology, including how psychological functioning is socially embedded; the influence of social and societal structures on the behavior of individuals, groups, and institutions; the importance of attitudes and norms for social action; individualization and identity development; and social integration and participation in social institutions and groups. The course introduces classic and contemporary theories and empirical research in social psychology, as well as the historical-embeddedness and development of its themes. Various methodological traditions are also introduced, along with their capabilities and limitations.
