Course Description

This course explores Chinese economic reforms and development, and introduces many of the elements of China's emergence and its potential role in the world economy. It uses China as a case study placing Chinese economic development in a historical and comparative context, exploring the contradiction between the unprecedented economic growth of the past century and the persistence of poverty in wealthy countries. The course begins with theories of economic growth and poverty, and studies economic and social institutions and public policy debates on ways to achieve rising incomes while improving living standards and promoting equality. The first part is on economic development and the most commonly used models of development. The second part covers contracts and development.

Chinese-taught version of ECONOMICS OF DEVELOPMENT IN AN ERA OF GLOBALIZATION. Slightly different title used at the host, but same course.
