Course Description
This course defines political engagement as an ensemble of militant acts, which could take place in a variety of frameworks and under different conditions. This wide definition of politics, which includes parties, unions, associations, and all other militant forms, invites the student to view political fact through a new lens. The course looks at the specifics of French political life, including the role played by external actors to the conventional political scene. This method also sheds light on the reciprocal relationship between actors and institutional and cultural systems. The four Constitutions that France has known since 1870 have shaped militant practices and have inversely been shaped by the subjectivity of the actors and the changes in their mode of engagement. Prerequisites for this course include a knowledge of French history from 1870 to present.
