Course Description
The lecture introduces fundamental questions and findings of second language acquisition research as well as other research areas dealing with the acquisition of languages after the acquisition of the native language(s) (tertiary language research, multilingualism research). Various theoretical approaches as well as empirical findings on the following topics are covered: learner language (survey, analysis, development), external influencing factors (input, interaction, control), learner-internal influencing factors (transfer from already acquired languages, age, individual cognitive and affective factors), Multilingual language acquisition. A special focus is on the acquisition of German as a target language. The seminar further discusses the topics raised in the lecture.
