Course Description
The study of European governance is not based on one single theoretical or methodological approach. Instead, it combines insights from law, economics, econometrics, psychology, sociology, and political science in order to understand various phenomena such as decision-making, institutional change, working practices, separation of powers, good governance, cooperation, and conflict. This course applies such a multidisciplinary perspective on the state of the art of the European Union. The course uses this perspective to discuss the changes that are taking place at the European scene as a result of enlargement, demands for democratization, effectiveness, widening, and deepening. The course explores phenomena such as the growth of agencies, comitology, executive control, the democratic deficit, regulatory networks, and decision-making. It covers both formal and informal working practices.
