Course Description
The course provides an overview of both important theoretical and empirical contributions and often refers to current issues on financial globalization and financial crises as well as recent work in international macroeconomics and finance. The prerequisites for this course are an introductory course in microeconomics and and more importantly one in macroeconomics. This course uses some basic mathematical tools that are common in any modern economic course. Students are required to attend regularly and participate actively. Textbooks: Paul R. Krugman, Maurice Obstfeld and Marc Melitz, INTERNATIONAL ECONOMICS: THEORY AND POLICY.
