Course Description
This course introduces students to analyses of crime, social reaction, and the power of the state to punish. The course is reflexive and does not take crime as a given but as a cultural construct. Students explore the factors leading to labeling events as "crimes," the foundations of criminology as a "science," and the implications of the theoretical statements for criminal justice policy and administration in Britain and elsewhere. Students also undertake a research essay. Students in this option undertake the fall-term portion of the year-long course Criminology.
