Course Description
This course provides an introduction to a small number of representative plays from the Renaissance period and from the 20th century. Special emphasis is laid upon conditions of production and reception: the literary, political, and theater-historical contexts in which these plays were first created and those in which they are now received. At the same time the distinctive nature of the theatrical medium is stressed, and students are encouraged to develop a flexible, critical response that takes proper account of the hybrid nature of plays both as texts and as performances.
