Course Description
This course examines the principal issues associated with modern international terrorism and efforts to counter it. The course considers a wide range of questions in order to provide a deeper understanding of the threat of terrorism today. Among the questions it examined are: How has terrorism evolved over time as a mode of political violence? What are the defining features of modern terrorism, including ideological principles, political motivations and organizational structure? What are the challenges associated with modern counter-terrorism responses? Specifically, the course analyzes both terrorism's effectiveness as a means to achieve political change and the challenges faced by the liberal democratic state in responding to domestic and/or international terrorist campaigns.
