Course Description
The course is organized around the themes of how we sociologically understand and interpret the phenomenon of religion. Emphasis is placed on the analysis of texts that are supplemented with empirical studies to encourage students to think sociologically about religion. The course addresses the classical concepts of religion as well as contemporary theories, and discusses the social, political, and cultural processes that affect transformation of religion and its institutions. Students examine relationships between religion and other spheres of social life such as politics, gender, sexuality, and health.
