Course Description

This course introduces key international dispute settlement procedures, both legal and political, through in-depth examinations of two cases: the North Korean Nuclear Crisis and the Rwandan Genocide (other relevant cases are discussed along the way). Emphasis is placed on the nexus between international law and politics. Students are expected to read the assigned readings and come prepared to give a presentation each week. Reference text: J.G. Merrills, International Dispute Settlement. Assessment: presentations, discussion, policy papers, final report.
