Course Description
This course explores the role and importance of warfare and the military in the ancient Mediterranean world. It touches on some of the more traditional aspects of military history, while analyzing the wider social, economic, and cultural contexts in which ancient warfare operated. The course covers Classical and Hellenistic Greece, as well as Republican and Imperial Rome, deploying a combination of ancient literary sources, modern scholarship, archaeological evidence, and ancient iconography to help explain the centrality and enduring importance of warfare to our understanding of the ancient world.
