Course Description

This course explores the basic principles of writing prose fiction, poetry, and creative non-fiction using a mixture of reading, writing, peer appraisal, and group project work. Students learn to critique, review, and appraise written work, from creative and critical analysis perspectives, applied in both individual and group-focused settings. They gain greater proficiency and abilities in intensive, in-depth, and extensive creative writing and reading, and they extend their capacity for creative and critical self-reflection. Students develop abilities in independent analysis, judgment, critical evaluation, and thought, in conjunction with progressing redrafting, revision, research, and note-taking skills. They also develop technical writing skills, basic publishing and design skills, and facilitate greater understanding and knowledge of editorial and publishing processes, in particular proof-reading, copy-editing, and various aspects of typesetting, design, and layout.
