Course Description
This course explores the origins and role of international and multilateral institutions in contemporary world politics, their functioning and their institutional framework. It examines how norms, rules, and multilateral institutions at the regional and supranational level affect relations between states, contacts across state borders, and global governance, and vice-versa. In particular, it discusses why and how states and other transnational actors seek to organize world politics, under what conditions particular forms of multilateral institutions (formal and informal) are most likely to emerge, and how effective they are in the management of economic, security, humanitarian, and environmental challenges.
