Course Description
This course introduces students to the role of the Islamic Republic of Iran in contemporary international relations (IR). Its approach is double: it looks at the history of Iran's external relations from 1953 to the present day; then, through a series of thematic sessions–covering modern Iranian foreign policy, political economy, nuclear policy, and relations with the United States–it deepens the understanding of Iran's actions on the international stage. The objective of the course is to equip students with the tools to understand and critically assess contemporary Iranian foreign policy and external action, as well as the relationship between the country's internal dynamics and foreign relations. The course is interactive and incorporates current events related to Iran, in order to enable students to make a link between the theoretical and historical elements presented in class and the events happening in the world today.
