Course Description
Students are expected to read widely and to engage with their own and other students' work in a seminar/workshop context. There is an element of "fieldwork" (note-taking and observation) and all students are expected to read out extracts from their work in progress and to contribute to discussion of the set texts and ideas arising from them. The course helps students approach literature confidently as participants, as well as critics. They gain a broader awareness of contemporary writing, and develop skills in shaping their own work.
