Course Description

This course examines the most important challenges facing our globalized society including inflation, unemployment, growth and sustainable development, environmental conservation, and international economic relations. It focuses on the economic principles that can be used to design, guide, and interpret economic and social policy. This course explores various instruments in economic policy including monetary policy, foreign policy, fiscal policy, and labor policy. It discusses current experiences in economic policy such as implementation of policies in the EU, transition countries, and underdeveloped countries.
