Course Description
This course presents the Irish song tradition as an important, if sometimes neglected area of native discourse and the verbal arts. The course focuses on Irish song, with particular reference to form, content, and style, in both the Irish- and the English-language traditions, as practiced throughout the island of Ireland. Employing translations where necessary, song transmission and acquisition in an Irish context is considered, as is performance and the various functions served by song, in both traditional and modern society.
