Course Description
In this course, students consider central conceptual and theoretical issues that arise in contemporary philosophy of mind and examine how these relate to questions concerning the nature of the mind, the world, and our conscious experience of it. The selection of issues covered varies from year to year, but may include one or more of the following: the nature of mental representation and content; the qualitative character of conscious experience; perception and how it relates to action; our thoughts and how they depend on external objects and/or other thinkers; machines and non-human animals and how they compare to humans; and emotions and how they guide our thought and behavior.
