Course Description
This course focuses on the broad evolutions in international relations on the world-scale, in order to better understand the current issues. Partly methodological (one session on the issue of race and gender in international relations) and partly thematic (one session on the evolution of war and its regulations, one on the Rights of Man on the international scene), but mostly chronological with a session focused on the first Cold War. The course interprets and illustrates rather than just presenting a chronological timeline of events. The class highlights the evolution of historiography using work and recent debates.
