Course Description
This course explores the central contradiction of Chinese politics today: the sustained liberalization of society and the concomitant closure of the political arena. While the aim of the course is to provide students with a thorough knowledge of China's recent political development, emphasis is placed on historical continuities and turning points. Major themes include the structure of single-party rule, central-local relations, the political-military nexus of power and China's new foreign policy under Xi Jinping. The course also considers the politics of environmental degradation and the use that the party-state makes of the law and the media to perpetuate its power.
