Course Description
This course covers the key issues involved in the study of language attitudes and language ideology. It addresses the political and ideological nature of language and communication, drawing on a number of paradigms of language attitudes and language ideology research. The main focus is on studying the research methods used in the field, including experimental language attitudes research and qualitative approaches in language ideology research.The course develops case studies that investigate language attitudes and ideologies with regard to a range of varieties of English and other languages. It also reflects on the relationship between beliefs about language, power relations, and social structure.
