Course Description
Industrialization involves the promotion and development of the industrial sector. Why have some countries industrialized faster than others? In particular, the manufacturing industries in some countries have remained backward and depended heavily on the use of labor while in other countries, they have become more advanced and relied more on the use of capital. This course discusses the theory and concepts that relate to industrialization. It also investigates the industrial experiences of other countries and the lessons from them. Focus is on Singapore, and how it compares with other SE Asian countries. This module consists of four parts: (1) conceptual framework, (ii) Northeast Asian experiences focusing on Japan and Korea, (iii) Southeast Asian country experiences such as Singapore, Malaysia, Thailand and the Philippines, and (iv) sectoral analysis such as textile and clothing, information and communications technology, and automotive industries.
