Course Description

This course examines how multinational enterprises strategize and operate in global competition. Major topics include the International Business Environment (e.g., the differences in economic, political, legal, and cultural environments); International Business Strategy (e.g., international expansion strategy, entry mode choices, cross-border strategic alliances, and mergers & acquisitions); and International Business Management (e.g., design, structure and control of international operations; and foreign subsidiary management). The emphasis of the course is on the application of contextual knowledge about international business and strategic management theories as tailored to the Asia Pacific, to analyze and make decisions faced by companies operating in the Asia Pacific region.
