Course Description
This course employs the analytical tools of economics to provide a better understanding of the workings and outcomes of labor markets. It applies economic theory to analyze and predict the behavior of and relationship between labor market participants; to understand the causes of important labor market trends and developments; and to discuss and evaluate policies affecting labor services. Major topics covered include the theory of individual labor supply, labor demand, economics of education, training and migration, trade unions and collective bargaining, economics of personnel, pay determination, and productivity.
