Course Description
The course examines international relations theories, which describe, explain, and predict international affairs. The course focuses on the core and the standard canon of International Relations theory (IRT), as well as the political interactions of states. The purpose of IRT is to support the analysis of international, but mostly political, events. Therefore, the course links theoretical work with the application of theory to the investigation of the international political world. Assessment: Midterm (15%), Final (15%), Participation (30%), Essays (40%).
