Course Description
This course explores theory, history, and debates on current U.S. foreign policy issues, providing students with a basis for understanding the transformations and continuities in U.S. Foreign policy as a means to pressing foreign policy issues. Students discuss the international significance of the economic, military, political, and cultural reach of the United States. This course also discusses how history, institutions, practices, people, objects, and ideas shape the decision-making processes that underlie U.S. foreign policy.
