Course Description
This course introduces students to the architecture of medieval London. Students analyze some of its foremost surviving examples—such as the Tower of London, Great St Bart's, Temple Church, and Westminster Abbey—before locating them within the larger contexts of post-Conquest England and current scholarship. Students examine the ways in which a variety of both ecclesiastical and secular buildings were constructed, the ends to which they were commissioned, and (where possible) evidence for how they were received.
