Course Description

This course covers the core of modern macroeconomics and is the intermediate level of macroeconomics. In this lecture, we introduce the dynamic macroeconomic theory and its applications to economic policy. Students are familiar with following concepts: measurement of macroeconomic variables, growth theory, monetary economics, international macroeconomics, the role of the financial system in the macroeconomy, consumption theory, and investment theory. Upon successful completion, students are expected to: (1) understand the concepts and terminologies that macroeconomists typically use; (2) understand the theoretical models that are useful to analyze macroeconomic issues; (3) explain and evaluate empirical implications and policy matters.
