Course Description
This interdisciplinary course focuses on place, people, and identity in Ireland, through its history, literature, and film. The course covers representations from the late 19th century to the present. The growth of distinctive urban cultures and rural cultures, and their role in the shaping of identity debates within Ireland, is of particular importance. The course also examines emigration and the diaspora (specifically in the US), and the ways in which identity structures are effected and affected by migration, displacement, and exile.
