Course Description
This course begins with the concepts of “citizenship” and “non-citizenship” and then focuses on comparative citizenship, migration law, and the EU Asylum System. The main topics of the course are citizenship and cosmopolitan theories, rules on citizenship and the status of non-citizens in a comparative perspective, general rules on entry and admissions, right to asylum, political refuge and subsidiary protection, rights of unauthorized immigrants, EU citizenship, and EU Common Asylum System. This course also covers the interplay between the EU, the ECHR, and national systems as far as the protection of foreigners is concerned. The course includes a written and individual oral presentation in class, discussion and class participation, and a final written exam. The course strongly recommends that students have already taken courses in constitutional and European law as prerequisites.
