Course Description
This course is about economic dimensions of current challenges facing the European Union (EU). The world economy is rapidly changing: the 2007-2008 financial crisis has had deep and lasting consequences on the functioning of the euro area; Brexit and new forms of unilateralism in the USA are challenging the EU traditional stance; multinational corporations and technical change are questioning the EU and European governments' capacity to regulate and to tax; ecological crises are threatening citizens' health and the future of mankind on earth. The course selects a number of issues that appear salient in current debates about the EU, its relationship with the rest of the world, and its future. It mobilizes the economist's analytical tool box to shed light on policy decision-making and pending issues.
