Course Description

This course explores concepts of social control, inequality, and social change from a multi-disciplinary perspective. The features and comparative advantages and disadvantages of major systems of social control are examined, including social groups, markets, and legal systems. The course also explores concepts of social inequality, seeking to understand how various social control dynamics contribute to the creation, reinforcement, and preservation of privilege and disadvantage focusing on racial and gender inequality. Using case studies, the course examines how social movements have pursued various strategies to drive social change to reduce racial or gender inequality.
