Course Description
This course consists of a number of thematic lectures on key issues in European prehistory. The themes include the introduction of agriculture, the origin of ore management, and the emergence of complex societies, focusing on how these processes were established and developed in southern, central and northern Europe. The conditions for, and the origin and implications of the impact of these different phenomena on human societies are discussed. The significance of these types of constantly ongoing changes in societal transformation in different parts of Europe are highlighted. The lectures and seminars focus on providing overviews of different chronological developments as well as discussing the implications of these societal changes.
