Course Description
This course looks at the ways that people and cultures construct meaning for musics, and the ways they understand and transform those meanings. We look at how we make decisions about music and its production and the kinds of value that we all attach to different kinds of music; the personal, communal, religious, patriotic, emotional and economic roles that music may play in the lives of musicians, composers and listeners; and we consider examples and case studies are drawn from around the globe, encompassing contemporary urban and remote village settings.
