Course Description
This design studio course explores the methodology of "critique by design" in issues related to the impact of urbanization and its meanings for urban landscape and urban form. The course focuses on design opportunities in an urban context that require an understanding of human behavior in existing neighborhoods, mixed-use sites and redevelopment areas in order to respond to the impact of urban growth, climate change, food production, flood and drought, erosion, deprivation of natural resources, and social justice. Students develop design frameworks through knowledge-based, sustainable, and environmentally-sound green design practices. The course considers the potential for landscape architecture to equitably enhance and elicit aesthetic and social connection within urban fabric. Students develop investigative and evaluative means around these concepts alongside the spatial and environmental concerns of dwelling and recreation.
