Course Description
This course introduces the theory and practice of applied linguistics, particularly in the context of Japanese as a second language (JSL). We address significant issues in learning and teaching Japanese using key concepts of applied linguistics, analyzing the characteristics of Japanese from cognitive-functional linguistic and sociolinguistic perspectives. In addition, this course covers essential syntax, semantics, and pragmatics of basic Japanese grammatical patterns that are introduced in beginner's Japanese classes. Students are expected to take an active role in the presentation and discussion of articles and data.
