Course Description
This course takes a critical and historical look at Irish cinema from the 1950s to the present. While its focus is on recent films, it also considers earlier works made by and about the Irish. The course covers topics such as the relationship between Irish cinema and other modes of cultural expression, the social background to the films, issues of government policy, the representation of violence, the Troubles and Northern Ireland, history, gender, and the Celtic Tiger and its aftermath.
