Course Description

This course introduces students to the history of the city in which they are studying. It highlights both the way in which the built environment and physical layout of the city has been shaped by historical processes, and how extant buildings, monuments, and objects can be used to illuminate the concerns and ambitions of those societies that have occupied the area from the early-medieval period onwards. Students analyze primary sources, textual and visual, that foster understanding of the way in which the city has developed through time. The course gives students an enhanced understanding of the cultural, political, social, and institutional history of the city and the university.
