Course Description
This course explores knowledge relating to the analysis of foreign policy from a comparative perspective. The course enables students to critically evaluate contending perspectives on foreign policy analysis, with respect to the foreign policies of key countries and IGOs. It prepares students for critical engagement with key themes surrounding foreign policy by asking them to apply theory to practice through the analysis of both primary and secondary literature. The course provides structured opportunities for students to develop and test their own hypotheses. By drawing on literature in the UK in particular, this course examines foreign policy from a comparative perspective. The course focuses on theories of foreign policy, followed by in-depth investigation of foreign policy in key countries and IGOs.
