Course Description

This course provides students with an introduction to some of the central debates and issues in practical philosophy, in particular in moral philosophy and political philosophy. It gives students a basic understanding of the issues in question, as well as to help them acquire and sharpen the necessary critical skills in reading, writing, and argument to engage with the debates, and develop their own views in dialogue with them. The course takes the form of an introduction to the three main divisions in moral philosophy – metaethics, moral theory, and applied ethics – as well as some of the central concepts of political philosophy. These are approached through the reading of a number of important articles and extracts, including extracts from some of the central texts in the history of moral and political philosophy.
