Course Description
This course examines the theory and practice of politics from a gendered perspective. It considers feminist debates concerning women's role in the public and private spheres and asks whether the political process can be complete without women. It then explores women's current involvement in politics and considers a range of explanations as to why women are under-represented, and possible solutions. The course also examines women's political participation within and beyond electoral politics, and asks what difference women can make.
