Course Description
This course studies the role of immigrants, migrants, and refugees as part of the contemporary debate over nationalism, transnationalism, and globalization. By studying New York and London's massive population expansions, urban-industrial development, and new metropolitan cultures, students learn how the histories of these cities have interacted and run in parallel for the past two centuries. This course surveys nationwide patterns and specifically interrogates the parallel histories of London and New York to better understand the nature of the migrant urban experience.
