Course Description
This course introduces students to key management theories, alternative psychological and social scientific theories, and the core debates in understanding both traditional and contemporary organizations. Students reflect on and critically assess a variety of approaches to understanding work and organizational practices. The course promotes discussion and debate on theories and issues relating to human motivation, work design, diversity, leadership, culture, and organizational change. In addition to human behavior within organizations, the course helps learners engage with issues relating to the wider environmental factors that shape working practices.
