Course Description

This course is an introduction to political geography. The course explores what political geography is, the key concepts, its subject matter, and why political geography is needed. Topics such as knowledge and power, representations of the other, nationalism, states and territories, globalization, feminist geography, and human-environment relations are covered. A key aspect of the course is to introduce critical thinking in relation to subject matters but also the production of knowledge. A fundamental question emerging from the course is thus what is the role of geography in an increasingly complex and intertwined world.
