Course Description
This course studies Berlin as the physical capital of literature, art, political strife, and philosophical resignation in Germany. The course explores the constant interpretative effort that is encapsulated in walking through a city and considers the act of perambulation as a scriptural paradigm. The seminar sessions compare significant locations such as libraries, museums, commemorative facades, and relegated clubs, but also authors' lived interiors, street corners and kiosks, as well as iconic urban areas and architectural emblems.
